1. The sense of humanity and of God alstrength and justice.

Judge White commences by giving a full ways made by surging masses of people, even where the theory is not moved by any one grand aim. Especially strong is this sense of the sublicity of man and of his creator when you feel yourself borne upon the immiatrial and yet real power of a inditinde throwing its mental, moral and spiritual energy forth in adoration, appeal or patriotism. The effect of this power in one is like, and yet greater than, that produced by occan, forest or storm. They speak of majestic God. It is something of this majesty of God that will bear you in awe duced by ocean, forest or storm. They speak and hope as you contemplate a multitude of willing choosing, intelligent creatures who are of may be sons of God.
